What Gives The Facilitator Credibility?

Shelton Kartun has a medical science, corporate and counselling background. He left South Africa in 1984 for the UK where he trained in anger management, stress management and stress counselling in the workplace. He has experience facilitating of group workshops and seminars, working one on one with clients as well as training professionals in anger management. He is one of the few specialists in the UK and South Africa with formal training in anger management. He co-founded the British Association of Anger Management and is founder and director of The Anger & Stress Management Centre of South Africa which was established upon his return to South Africa in 2004. He has appeared in many interviews in the press and on TV and radio in the UK and South Africa discussing anger and rage and can often be seen featured in one or more of the monthly glossy magazines sold in South Africa. He has worked with celebrities from around the world and writes on the subject for magazines and special publications. He is also developing solutions to address the ever increasing road rage and other rage problems in South Africa

What Would You Benefit From Attending This Workshop

Delegates would gain an insight into anger and emotions, and be empowered to manage anger and conflict using the tools they would have learned so that they stay in control when challenged. They will also learn a great deal about stress and how it impacts them emotionally, behaviourally and health-wise. They will learn many tips to manage stressors in their lives and develop a stress-proofing plan for the future.
